NYTF Reality TV Contest: You're the Star!

April 14, 2008

The New York Television Festival, with Procter & Gamble Productions, is holding the Flying Solo TV Pilot Contest, in which female college seniors can audition for the chance to make their lives the subject of a television pilot.

The pilot, combining professionally shot, third-person footage of the subject's life with first-person footage shot by the subject, will be shopped to network partners of the festival. The objective is to discover budding female storytellers who lead interesting lives and have a unique ability to capture and present them on video.

"The New York Television Festival fulfills its mission to give voice to a new generation of talented storytellers through initiatives such as the Flying Solo TV Pilot Contest," said Terence Gray, the festival's founder.

To be eligible for the contest, a potential entrant must be female and have graduated or be on track to graduate college during the 2007-2008 academic year. All entrants must shoot and produce an audition video that introduces viewers to several aspects of their lives after graduation. These aspects may include family members, friends, summer jobs, internships, career aspirations, relationships, travel plans, final days of college, commencement ceremonies, and hobbies. The audition video must be two to four minutes in length and shot primarily by the entrant. Deadline is May 23. Submit online at nytvf.com/2008_pgp_info.htm. Three winners will be selected to star in their own new television pilot. For more information, please visit www.newyorktelevisionfestival.com.
